

Audubon Society of Portland

2007-2008 Annual Report

A message from Portland Audubon

Oregon is home to a truly amazing wealth of native wildlife that inspires us, enriches our days, and calls upon us to protect what is precious, memorable and essential in our lives. How fortunate we are to live in a state where 500 species of local and migratory birds sing, soar, nest and feed nearby.

Portland Audubon supporters are conscious of both the beauty and fragility of this natural heritage. National and international studies, and our own observations close to home, show us that habitat demise threatens not just birds and wildlife, but our own healthy living environment as well.

We believe we can make a difference for birds, native wildlife and this area's quality of life. For more than 100 years, Portland Audubon has been a passionate advocate for effective conservation practices and policies, while promoting enjoyment and understanding of birds and natural surroundings through our sanctuaries and multi-faceted programs.

The Portland Audubon community stands together to protect shared habitat, so that people and native wildlife can flourish together – right here where we live.

From the Executive Director

Dear Friends,

Portland planned to keep large parks and natural areas central to this vital city, even back in 1902 when Portland Audubon was founded. As Executive Director during the past five of our 106 years, I'm proud to show that what we do together counts a great deal toward preserving quality of life in the Portland metropolitan area for people and wildlife. We have seen:

Thousands of families touched each year by Portland Audubon presentations, camps, the Wildlife Care Center, trips and events that engage people in birds, habitat, and the things they can do to make a difference.

At least $500 million in new public funding for a legacy of green in the area, with Portland Audubon actively shaping plans and understanding of the value of protecting and restoring natural areas, rivers and streams for people and native wildlife.

Transformation of our core facilities, with much-needed improvements to the buildings and sanctuaries where 60,000 people come each year to enjoy and learn about birds and native habitat.

A 4-star rating by the nation's top non-profit evaluation organization. In these times of economic uncertainty, we are especially proud of this testimony to judicious management of your valued support.

Much of our work is long-term in nature, and very difficult to quantify, yet our collective impact is broad. At least 209 of the 500 bird species found in Oregon depend on the Portland-Vancouver metropolitan region during their lives. Understanding the importance of urban habitat confirms us in our dedication to offering many different ways for people to engage locally. We are a community of people that welcomes one and all to join in reaching for our vision:

A city and region where people and native wildlife flourish together

This year's annual report does Portland Audubon by the numbers to illustrate the broad reach of our vision. At Portland Audubon, we believe we all can count – by making a difference in big ways and small.

With kindest regards,

Meryl Redisch

Executive Director, Audubon Society of Portland

Leaders in Conservation

Portland Audubon is a leading voice for preserving and restoring natural areas in the Portland metropolitan area through conservation advocacy and outreach that engages people locally. We are pioneers in demonstrating the value of urban habitat to sensitive species, and in developing and sharing urban wildlife best practices for wider adoption.

Serving as a valuable resource for citizens who care about conservation

3,000 animals found injured or orphaned were treated by staff veterinarians and 80 trained volunteers at the Wildlife Care Center.

15,000 queries were answered by the Urban Wildlife Resource Office, providing information to support learning to live with wildlife.

250,000 hits on Raptor Cam gave people up-close views of Red-tailed hawks nesting, raising and fledging young from the ledge of a downtown Portland building.

Projecting powerful and collaborative voices for a sustainable Portland Metropolitan area

$50 million was allocated to improving urban watershed health through the City of Portland's Grey to Green Initiative, promoted and developed with Portland Audubon.

Thousands of staff and supporter hours shaped policies and practices to make Portland a place where people and wildlife can flourish together, and where every person can live within 1/4 mile of a natural area.

As a core member of the Connecting Green Alliance, Portland Audubon is helping to develop a coalition of groups working together to create the world's greatest bi-state metropolitan greenspace network.

Protecting Birds in the Backyard and Beyond

Conservation accomplishments include:

Backyard Habitat Certification Program development to help people restore native wildlife habitat in their neighborhoods.

Wind power guidelines to minimize harm to birds in renewable energy development.

A plan for a network of marine reserves and protected areas in Oregon.

Fighting roll-back of protections for Spotted Owls, Marbled Murrelets and other wildlife dependant on old growth forests.

A process toward legislation to penalize illegal raptor killing as a felony offense.

18,000 people attended public appearances by our seven non-releaseable education birds, and hundreds of admirers visited them at their enclosures.

Our Education Birds: Aristophanes, the Raven • Finnegan, the Peregrine Falcon • Hazel, the Spotted Owl (pictured) • Jack Sparrowhawk, the American Kestrel • Julio, the Great Horned Owl • Ruby, the Turkey Vulture • Syd, the Red-tailed Hawk

2,500 people
witnessed the release of 50 rehabilitated birds.

Providing Nature Education and Events

Enjoyment is the first step toward becoming a conservationist. Portland Audubon conducts classes, camps and outdoor events that draw people of all ages into deeper understanding of the diverse birds, other wildlife, and habitats nearby.

Teaching people to love, understand and protect nature

10,000 children learned about nature through Audubon in-school programs.

1,400 young participants shared outdoor experiences in Audubon nature camps, including sponsored camps for children from low-income families.

50,000 people participated in 200 environmental outreach events including bird, plant and art festivals, excursions, presentations and perennial favorites:

Birdathon, a good-natured competition to spot a maximum number of bird species in a limited time, and raise funds for Portland Audubon.

Swiftwatch, where 20,000 people celebrated the migratory gathering of Vaux Swifts by the thousands at Portland's Chapman School chimney.

Peregrine Watch, engaging 150 volunteers in citizen science to monitor recovery of these graceful aerial divers.

Wild Arts Festival, an art show and book fair that celebrates nature and raises funds for Portland Audubon.

Wild in the City outdoor adventures, Bird Nights and Nature Nights to learn from experts, multi-day birding trips and much more.

Audubon Nature Sanctuaries

Audubon's Portland sanctuary is a prominent and accessible attraction for local and international visitors.

It offers respite in native forest and serves as home base for most Portland Audubon activities. Mountain and coastal sanctuaries offer habitat for sensitive species on protected lands.

Welcoming people to savor native forest habitat close to home

60,000 people visited our 150-acre sanctuaries in Portland, and thousands visited our Nature Store and interpretive center at 5151 NW Cornell Road for gifts and birding essentials.

210 acres of important habitat were added to our sanctuaries on the Central Oregon coast along with a $200,000 endowment for its stewardship, and an adjacent five acres came under ownership at Audubon's home base in Forest Park.

$70,000 for green capital improvements was awarded by the Bureau of Environmental Services and Metro's Nature in Neighborhoods, the Northwest Neighborhood Parks and Recreation Fund of the Oregon Community Foundation. These funds were used for storm water improvements, habitat restoration and native plantings.

$250,000 for facilities capital investments from the Collins Foundation, the Alice C. Tyler Perpetual Trust, the Juliet Ashby Hillman Foundation, the Summer Lea Hillman Foundation, Metro to make improvements in our Interpretive Center, Heron Hall, the Caretaker's House and Marmot Cabin.

Realizing our Mission

Portland Audubon welcomes all those who wish to join a community of people who care about nature. Members and supporters become part of a powerful local organization doing its part to leave a legacy of a liveable Portland.

Making a difference

10,000 people supported Portland Audubon through their membership, making Portland Audubon one of the largest Audubon chapters in the United States.

300 active volunteers dedicated more than 30,000 hours to clearing trails and invasive plants, answering phones, caring for injured wildlife, supporting events and contributing the equivalent of $563,820* in estimated value.

4-star rating, the top level available, was awarded by the Charity Navigator for efficient non-profit management. Charity Navigator wrote:

"Audubon Society of Portland executes its mission in a fiscally responsible way, and outperforms most other charities in America. This "exceptional" designation from Charity Navigator differentiates Audubon Society of Portland from its peers and demonstrates to the public it is worthy of their trust."
