Portland Audubon Wildlife Sanctuary

Portland Audubon's 172-acre Wildlife Sanctuary is nestled against Forest Park just ten minutes from downtown Portland. This free, family friendly sanctuary has more than 4 miles of hiking trails, and is a safe-haven for flora and fauna.

PITTOCK BIRD SANCTUARY

The Pittock Bird Sanctuary was once part of a dairy farm. In 1929, 12 acres of the farm were purchased by Portland Audubon; just a year later, an additional 18 acres were donated by the Pittock Family. Balch Creek flows through the Sanctuary for more than a mile and is populated by native cutthroat trout. The only still-water habitat in the Balch Creek Watershed is a small pond on the Sanctuary, home to Rough-skinned newts.

UHTOFF SANCTUARY

Uhtoff Sanctuary is on a 34 acre parcel purchased in 1982 through various fundraising activities. A narrow trail on steep hillsides traverses five small ravines.

THE COLLINS SANCTUARY

The Collins Sanctuary (86 acres) is owned by Metro and maintained for public use by Portland Audubon. Of the 3 sanctuaries, it has less mature Douglas Fir, Hemlock, and Western Red Cedar and is dominated by an Alder forest.

KEHOE SANCTUARY

Added in 2019 thanks to the Kehoe Family, the 22-acre Kathryn Kehoe Sanctuary borders West Burnside Road and sits right against the Uhtoff Sanctuary. It contains the headwaters to Balch Creek, which hosts the healthiest population of native cutthroat trout in the city.
